How can he know the difference between REALLY being on the run from the cops and his normal "being on the run from the cops and the CIA" delusions that everyone says is fake? To him there is nothing clearly different between them and he does fine when he usually live streams.

He has no real reason to know it's any more of a bad idea than usual. He might not have known that he was chased by the cops for real.

This prison is known for it's civil rights abuses, it's inhuman treatment of it's prisoners and through audits, the deplorable medical care for inmates in their care has been documented. The cases are many. The guards treat prisoners in inhuman ways, making them stand shackled for hours on end, subject them to humiliation and deny them food. Prison guards and administration with unchecked power. Most of these inmates are only being held for trial, not yet convicted of any crime and they are treated to routine cavity searches violating their Constitutional rights- these cavity searches taking place even though they are forced to see visitors through glass. This prison is un-American and an deplorable excuse for the violation of human rights. This torture center needs to be audited and guards investigated for routine abuse of these held awaiting trial. This is a for-profit prison and is audited for sexual abuse but not torture and abuse as they implement torture into their procedures and practices, thus hiding behind this behavior as "adhering to rules".

>I was here on a 2 week lay over. Since I'm out of the gang life, I was segregated by myself and could only go out 1 hour a day. The cell that I got had dried blood all over the wall and floor. The food was not bad but not enough. All in all, it was not as bad as it sounds, but of course it all depends on how you decide to do your time.

>They Torture Political Prisoners and lie about it. They donate to corrupt Politicians who cover for them is my guess. I have not researched it ..

It does not matter if a Prison is Private or Government Run . If it does not have the proper checks and balances there will be abuse.. I thought Private would be more efficient .. but they Operate in Secrecy ..

Some claim that Trump owns Stock in this Rotten Corrupt Prison System .. have not researched that yet either..

>Not my experience but what is going on there torture is what is happening, but the Ammons in solitary confinement no food/water for 12 hours in shackles; taking their clothes, throwing them in cold showers, making them ill. This is cruel!

>-This prison is known for it's civil rights abuses, it's inhuman treatment of it's prisoners and through audits, the deplorable medical care for inmates in their care has been documented. The cases are many. The guards treat prisoners in inhuman ways, making them stand shackled for hours on end, subject them to humiliation and deny them food. Prison guards and administration with unchecked power. Most of these inmates are only being held for trial, not yet convicted of any crime and they are treated to routine cavity searches violating their Constitutional rights- these cavity searches taking place even though they are forced to see visitors through glass. This prison is un-American and an deplorable excuse for the violation of human rights.

Nice place.

From what I hear anti-psychotic medication is awful. He likely just wanted a little break so that he could feel comfy again.

Just like how you don't like to work all day and all night without sleep even if you could and even if it was good for you. You would likely just "rest a little" after a while.

>No sympathy at this point for people that don't want help.

And how do you know that he don't want help you heartless evil swine? He just did not want to feel horrible all the time and then suddenly the illness took over. To society. Imagine that, someone might want to choose what feels best for them rather than what's best for society. Keep in mind I'm not saying he should have stopped his meds, but to say "he made the choice" is too simplistic, since there are strong reasons for why one might be motivated to not take them.

Don't do it, I went through that shit. They use it as an "adjunct". Enjoy feeling like a zombie, gaining a fuckton of weight, and potential for tardive dyskinesia in the future. It's honestly worse than the depression. If you're really bad, like you think you might honestly kill yourself soon, then forget what I said and listen to your doctor, but if you're not that bad, and you still haven't explored diet/exercise, do that first. Going on antipsychotics is not a decision to be taken likely, despite how easily a psychiatrist will prescribe them for non-psychosis.

I bet my ass that you've never had any depressions or drugs. Been on that stuff, too. It was the best decision in my life.

Yes, I also was scared as shit. But when I took that stuff it was like some mist going away that you never really noticed. I felt "emotionally clear" for the first time since months.

The shit is, the more mentally ill you are, the less you realize it. People are scared as shit when you try to say they should take something against their depression. but I have never EVER seen someone who did regret it in the long run. Everything is better than becoming suicidal and slowly sinking into some weird echo chamber in your mind.

The trick is to not stop this shit as soon as feel better. That's when people kill themselves. Just takes those fucking stuff for half a year and make a therapy, you have nothing to lose but everything to gain.

I think if people are really desperate, they should try whatever tools are available. But medication shouldn't be first-line treatment, and you certainly shouldn't start handing out antipsychotics for depression unless it's REALLY serious (e.g. catatonic depression).

All I want to say is that I've seen some people taking those little pills and some people refusing that kind of stuff. Ironically: the more people need it the more resistance they usually have (including me at some point in my life). The people refusing it are usually the ones who still keep on having the same problems after years.

Don't be an asshole and burden for the people who hold you dear, just bite the bullet and in a year of emotional effort and it will pay off. It really will.

Treatment is the last, and most expensive option, offered; only if you seek it out.

They just throw people in the slammer once they fuck up and they keep coming back. Look up US incarceration ratios vs the rest of the world and it's quite scary.

Fucking idiot... John Forbes Nash would not have contributed his findings in mathematics if he was heavily medicated or confined. Same with Jack Kerouac, Syd Barret, Daniel Johnston or Charles "Buddy" Bolden (one of the guys who invented Jazz).

Being a Schizophrenic don't mean that people are dangerous or can't contribute to society. John Nash worked many year as a professor while suffering from all sorts of delusions. The difference was that he had access to proper care and help.

>Good for you, you're part of the percentage that responds to drugs. Unfortunately, that percentage isn't very high.

That's a little bit too broad. I'd say there are many many different drugs and therapies and you have to pick your poison. A person I knew was given stuff that made him sleepy and the person stopped it for that very reason. But that was bullshit, because there is many other different stuff that doesn't make you sleepy at all.

For myself it was similar, the first doc gave me some stuff that wasn't great and caused me more problems than it solved.. Then I visited another doctor who told me this was a really stupid thing to take and totally old school. The first doc was probably just too old and didn't know it was shit, who knows... But then I got new stuff and it was a really good decision to try it again.

I also think drugs are not a replacement for therapy, you really should take both, if you can. But it's better to try meds than not to try, IMHO.

I'm the dude that told you not to do it. Honestly, you shouldn't be scared. They're not gonna fuck you up permanently after being on them for a few months. If you want to try them, go for it and see for yourself. Realistically, you'll be fine in the long run. But be honest with yourself on if they're really helping or not. Watch your diet, though, because they will fatten you up very quickly. I gained 30 pounds in 3 months, without any change in diet (yes, they can actually alter your metabolism).

It's a risk/reward thing. If your depression is really bad, maybe it's worth trying. But that's why I suggested diet and exercise to try before anything else.

For profit prisons exist, but not as common as people make them out to be. Basically because some people just can't not break the law, we ran out of room in prisons and had to make new ones and pay outside companies to run them. It's a big deal recently in US politics, especially after "cash for kids", where a judge was sending kids to a specific prison for anything he could throw together, in return for a payout from the prison owner.

16 grand a year is poverty in many states. In most liberal states you will struggle to find an apartment for under 800 a month.

I live in bum fuck florida and own my own house. That said a pound of chicken breast costs 14 fucking dollars. I had to pay 8000 dollars for a new air conditioning system 3 months ago. I make just under 100 grand a year and my life is comfy but on the verge of poor and god forbid I get into any kind of serious accident/really hurt myself.

In the past I also dealt with schizophrenia like terry. Medicaid/Medicare DO NOT cover many of the medications and I paid 800~ a month for some at one point. Literally cost me more to try and fix myself than I would have spent just buying legal oxy or flat out heroin.

TL;DR cost of living in united states fluctuates massively depending on the state. Housing might be dirt fucking cheap but produce and meat will fuck you over. Medications cost a fortune. Insurance is good luck have fun tier if your employer isn't paying for it or your state isn't subsidizing you.

Is there a difference between a prison and a jail in burgersan? Is terry surrounded by rapist and murderers awaiting trial, or the regular kind? Not having a filter will not do terry any good in either case...

Jail is where you stay awaiting trial or for small sentences. Prison is where you go after sentencing. There's a reason this is called a "detention facility" and not a prison. Jails usually have worse conditions I've heard. But the quality of inmates might be higher because they aren't convicted of serious crimes.

do a google image search of "pahump detention center". A few of the top hits will be the conditions Terry might face in general population when he is there. I do not think he will like it.

Prayers go out to the madman. He may not be the hero we deserve, but he's the hero we need. And so the CIA Niggers will jail him, because he can take it.

human contact is what he needs. he craves it, but is too nervous/self-conscious for it. being forced into is probably the best thing for him.
